URSA FARM UPDATE

Sharon Ballah

A seed has been planted in Nova Scotia and is starting to sprout green leaves. What kind of plant will it become? A lily? A healing herbal? Hard to say at this point.

Ursa farmstead is the seed for a potential intentional community inspired by Anthroposophy. It has sixty acres of gently hilled land, a large field ready for new buildings, homes perhaps, a school or an elder care building. The homes built here would overlook the farm below; with its cows, chickens, turkeys and sheep, a large vegetable garden, all tenderly cared for now by Justin and Suzanna. Children come every week to run through the fields, care for the animals, build shelters and fires and other bush craft. The farm school created by Suzanna and Justin has met with a warm response from the wider community. They are looking for another teacher to help his Waldorf inspired school grow.

I moved here 2 years ago to live with my daughter and her family. After city life it is wonderful to live within the being of nature, to watch this farm centred community become what it will become. There is room for many other homes and families to join us. We will soon have a second zoom meeting for interested potential partners. If you are interested, please contact: suz.ballah@gmail.com

Review: Tim Nadelle Workshop for Anthroposophy Canada Wide From Egotism to Love

Ottawa member Tim Nadelle has a new book the topic of which is the soul capacity of feeling. On Sunday April 13th we gathered on zoom with Tim who led us through a series of exercises on the cultivation of feeling. Tim provided clear and insightful direction in how to work with feelings in a way that reveals deeper intentions in our behavior, reactions and responses. These exercises help us to become clear regarding our true motivations. They reveal the often hidden egotism which our unexamined feeling life can contain. In groups, participants shared the results of the exercises with each other which were then further elaborated on by Tim. We thank Tim for joining us and look forward to future presentations.

The June Anthroposophy Canada Wide presentation will be with T. Michael Cox on the subject of Money and Threefolding. Date: TBA

Find Zoom recordings of Anthroposophy Canada Wide presentations in the Members' Area of our website. Past presentations include Robert McKay on Steiner's spiritual path and Luigi Morelli on befriending and overcoming social polarization.

Nicolette: "Basically we have almost all the titles – if we don't have it, we can get it. Most people order from amazon but they would pay the same to buy from us and in so doing, would be supporting our work. Whatever the US price is on the website, once converted to Canadian funds is what we charge. The book isn't just about supplying books - it's about building relationships. People who have been to many anthroposophical communities mention it is the largest one they have seen."
